TENUTA SAN GUIDO

Who would have thought, 70 years ago, that Sassicaia table wine would become an essential cult product?

In principle, Sassicaia wasn't supposed to be put on the market. It was born of an experiment: in 1944, Marchese Mario Incisa della Rocchetta, a descendant of a noble Piedmontese family, was the first to plant Cabernet Sauvignon and Cabernet Franc, two Bordeaux grape varieties, in the small village of Bolgheri in the Maremma region. The two varieties adapted perfectly to the heat of southern Tuscany. Initially, it was intended to be an everyday wine to be drunk by family and friends. But Nicolò, Mario's son and current owner of Tenuta San Guido, encouraged his father to bring Sassicaia to market. It was in 1968 that this vintage was first marketed.
